was busily engaged in its normal pursuits also such as evaluating the "fitness" of its officers. Not only in their performance of official duties — but in how suitably and "decisively" they and their wives were "representatives of their country and their Army as a team"! (Packet - Pocket 91) Where non-officers the Army also reserved the right to approve or disapprove their marriages. An apprentice seaman was required to obtain permission of his C.O before falling in love with and marrying the woman of his choice.
